Copyright Notice

The making of a copy of any copyright work is an infringement of copyright unless permission has first been obtained from the copyright owner or a copyright exception applies.

Copyright exceptions in UK law include making a fair dealing copy for the “purposes of private study or research for a non-commercial purpose”, which for those purposes permits you to make and use a single copy of:

- one article from any one issue of a journal or periodical
- one chapter from a published book or extracts from a published book up to a maximum of 5% of the whole of the book
- musical work, i.e. sheet music – a short excerpt for study purposes but not performance
- map or atlas – an A4 extract from a map or atlas page.

By law, such a copy may only be given to one other person for the purposes of private study or non-commercial research. The copy may not be given to multiple parties, which means the copy may not be made available in any network, including in restricted intranets or websites or social media. All responsibility for ensuring that copyright is not infringed and any infringement of copyright that occurs is borne by the person making the copy and the person (if different) for whom the copy is being made.

You may only make single copies, unless you are authorised under the University’s Copyright Licensing Agency Higher Education Licence (CLA HE Licence) to make and distribute multiple photocopies or scans of published copyright material, including to students. Mandatory distribution and reporting rules apply to scanned copies. Please refer to the CLA HE Notice adjacent to this Notice, also available at https://he.cla.co.uk/your-he-licence/support-materials/, CLA Notice for Display.

For further information about the CLA HE Licence and 'Copyright Compliance' for University of Cambridge staff and students:
http://www.legal.admin.cam.ac.uk/how-we-can-help/copyright-compliance (Raven access); https://camtools.cam.ac.uk/access/content/public/copyright.html.

For copyright information from the UK Intellectual Property Office: