Lecture Capture: Student Terms of End-Use

This notice serves as a reminder to students not to make unauthorised copies or to distribute provided course material. This statement can be used independently or in conjunction with additional information provided as part of the lecture capture service, where applicable. Ultimately it is planned that students receive this as a ‘click-through’ acceptance before accessing any material; however, this is currently unconfirmed pending the end solution for lecture capture.

Students are notified that all lecture content is copyrighted material, owned by the lecturer, who retains copyright in lecturer-authored content. There may also be third parties who own copyright in material which may be included in the content.

Copies may not be made without the formal consent of the lecturer and third parties (as applicable); this includes audio recordings of the lecture as well as all accompanying material, presented both during, in advance of and following the lecture. Students recording for reasonable adjustments are welcome to do so, and are reminded that the terms of their signed agreement to record apply.

You may use lecture content, recordings of lectures and accompanying materials for your own private study and non-commercial research. Otherwise, the content, recordings and materials must not be copied, stored or distributed (including by e-mail or attachment or in an intranet or on the internet and social media) unless by statutory exception or with the consent of the rights holders, i.e. the lecturer, the University and third party material rights owners, as applicable.

Failure to comply with the terms of this warning may result in disciplinary action by the University and legal claims for copyright infringement.
